Dear Mr. Levchin:

We are writing to request information regarding Affirm’s Buy Now Pay Later (BNPL) and associated loan products. Consumers are increasingly turning to BNPL products to finance daily living expenses, yet due to the Trump Administration’s efforts to undermine the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau’s (CFPB) ability to monitor consumer lending products,¹ we know less about these consumer products than ever. Amidst this rollback, we seek data to help us better understand these products, any associated risks to consumers, and their impact on the economy.

BNPL loans are typically short-term loans that allow consumers to make a specific purchase and pay off the purchase in four payments.² If the consumer misses or is late on a payment, they can be charged fees.³ Often the consumer is required to authorize autopay to cover their payments.⁴ While these loans theoretically make it easier for consumers to smooth payment of large purchases, we are concerned that BNPL loans may also cause consumers to overextend themselves and take on additional, expensive debt.

In 2021, BNPL providers originated an estimated $24.2 billion of loans in the United States, and the global market has grown since then.⁵ BNPL loans are becoming increasingly common with consumers, with up to half of Americans having used a BNPL loan.⁶ Approximately a quarter of BNPL users have held three or more BNPL loans at once,⁷ potentially with multiple BNPL providers. Consumers are depending on BNPL to pay for essentials such as groceries, healthcare, and to make payments on other forms of consumer debt, further demonstrating how intertwined BNPL loans have become in consumers' financial lives.⁸

BNPL users are also increasingly paying these loans late while carrying more consumer debt, which may be a sign of stress in BNPL users' finances. In April 2025, 41 percent of BNPL users reported making a late payment in the past year, which is a 7 percent increase from the year before.⁹ Further, consumers using BNPL loans "were more likely to hold higher balances on other types of unsecured consumer credit," suggesting that these consumers are already becoming overextended compared to their peers with similar ages and credit scores.¹⁰ A consumer with a BNPL loan had, on average, $871 more in credit card debt in the month of origination than a consumer of the same age and credit score category who did not originate a BNPL loan that month.¹¹ This could suggest that consumers are turning to BNPL when their other sources of credit are less available—and may be taking on debt they cannot afford.

However, unlike more traditional forms of debt, there is insufficient available data about BNPL products.¹² Not all BNPL loans are included on a consumer's credit report.¹³ FICO is just beginning to consider BNPL in their scoring—and is doing so with incomplete information.¹⁴ Moreover, it is unknown what BNPL providers know about their own borrowers and their use of other BNPL products.

The best available data about consumers' BNPL use appears to be surveys by third parties¹⁵ or sample data that was last updated in 2022 and provided to the CFPB.¹⁶ Notably, BNPL providers had previously been regulated by the CFPB pursuant to an interpretative rule that classified them as “credit card issuers” and “creditors” and classified BNPL loans largely as “credit cards.”¹⁷ Under this interpretive rule, BNPL providers would have been required to provide additional protections to consumers.¹⁸ However, under the Trump Administration, the CFPB announced it would no longer prioritize enforcement actions against BNPL providers¹⁹ and withdrew the interpretive rule authorizing CFPB regulation under the Truth in Lending Act.²⁰

We are also aware of recent reporting that FICO is releasing two new versions of its credit score that will encompass BNPL data.²¹ The new scores will purportedly “aggregat[e] separate BNPL loans together when calculating certain in-model variables.”²² However, multiple major BNPL players are not providing their customers’ data due to concerns about FICO’s current methodology and the effects on their customers’ credit scores.²³ It is unclear what, if any, effect FICO’s new scoring algorithm will have if multiple, major BNPL providers decline to include BNPL data in FICO’s analysis.

As this market grows and becomes more entwined with consumers’ regular financial activities and those consumers are showing signs of financial distress, we require a greater understanding of these products, their users, and their role in the broader economy. As such, we request answers to the following questions no later than December 9th. Where appropriate, please provide data quarterly and annually for the time period 2022-present. Please limit your responses to U.S. based consumers.

The Use of Affirm’s Loan Products:

1. For each of Affirm’s loan products, including BNPL, installment, and other forms of consumer loans, please provide answers to the following questions²⁴:

2. Across all of Affirm's loan products, please provide:
 - a. Data related to demographics of users, to include (as available) age, race, ethnicity, gender, geography, and income
 - b. What is the average total loan amount per consumer of Affirm's products?
 - c. What is the average frequency that consumers use any of Affirm's loan products?
 - d. Data about how a consumer's purchases vary based on Affirm's measure of that consumer's risks

The Size and Relative Risks of Affirm's Loan Portfolio

1. Please describe the total value of each of Affirm's loan products.
2. How does Affirm gauge the default risk and risk of late payments ("late risk") of consumers for each of these loan products? What factors go into the measure of a consumer's risks and how accurate is Affirm's prediction of risk, as reflected in actual default rates and rates of late payments?
3. Has Affirm conducted any internal studies or research that either support or dispute concerns that consumers using BNPL loans are overextended? Are consumers of Affirm's loan products more likely to have additional forms or higher levels of consumer debt than non-users?
4. In general, what trends or changes has Affirm noticed regarding the profile and riskiness of a new user of Affirm's BNPL products in the last 3 years (or as far back as appropriate).
5. Are new users learning about Affirm's products in different ways than they did 3 years ago?

Affirm's Cooperation with FICO

6. Is Affirm providing any data to FICO or any of the three major U.S. credit bureaus, including any data related to non-BNPL loan products?
7. Has Affirm conducted any internal studies related to how data related to Affirm's BNPL data would affect consumers' FICO scores? If so, please provide details about the study, its methodology, and results.
8. Please summarize major communications between Affirm and FICO related to including BNPL data in FICO's calculations.

9. If Affirm does not provide data on any given loan products for inclusion in FICO's scoring system, please explain why. Does Affirm anticipate that position changing in the next twelve months? If so, please provide information on the plans, discussions, negotiations, or other events that have and will lead up to this change.

Additional Questions

10. Does Affirm intend to continue complying with the Truth in Lending Act and all applicable requirements for credit card issuers, credit cards, and creditors as described in Regulation Z?
 - a. If yes, please explain how Affirm complies with the Truth in Lending Act.
 - b. If no, please explain why.
11. Does Affirm currently sell, or have plans to or is engaged in discussions related to the potential sale of, any loan products to third parties? If so, please provide an overview of the agreement to include material terms of the agreement, a description of which loans are included in the sale and how those loans were selected, and information related to how losses due to late payments or default are handled by the agreement.
12. Are you aware of any monitoring, supervision, enforcement or other regulatory action taken in relation to Affirm by the CFPB between 2022 and present?
 - a. If yes, please provide details of the CFPB regulatory action. Please provide any documents, letters, or other communications provided to Affirm by the CFPB that explains or relates to the regulatory action.
 - b. Is the regulatory action ongoing?
 - i. If yes, please provide details related to any action taken by Affirm and by the CFPB since January 2025 in relation to the regulatory action.
 - ii. If no, how was the regulatory action resolved? Please provide any documents, letters, or other communications related to the resolution.
13. Since January 2025, have you received any communications from the CFPB indicating that any regulatory action related to Affirm has been paused, postponed, or limited?
